

If you caught the first issue of ChAPTER One you would have seen...

Last fall, the American Institute of Chemical Engineers (AIChE) introduced ChAPTER One (tm) a "full service" magazine geared to the special needs and interests of undergraduate chemical engineering students. Published twice a year, in the fall and spring, ChAPTER One includes technical stories highlighting new directions and opportunities in chemical engineering, as well as regular features on career planning, campus activities, and profiles of outstanding students and young professionals.

The magazine also presents guest editorials, lists of professional contests, scholarships and grants, and reviews of relevant books. "Primary Elements," a people-in-the-news section, spotlights students and faculty who are involved in important and interesting activities, while "Base Notes" offers brief write-ups on noteworthy campus projects.

Future issues of ChAPTER One will present findings of the National Research Council's Committee on Chemical Engineering Frontiers: Research Needs and Opportunities, report on the Student Pugwash Organization, which explores the relationship between science and society, and give tips on preparing resumes and managing stress.
