

SCHOOL-BASED 4-H PROGRAMMING SERIES

Working with Partners Effectively

Why Partnerships?

Partnerships open a world of possibilities. Partnerships provide an opportunity for multiple organizations to address community challenges while benefitting at the same time through shared resources, funding, personnel, and expertise.

Desiring to partner with a school-based site is beneficial but not always easy to implement. For more information on what a school-based program is, refer to School-Based 4-H Programming: Getting Started (<https://edis.ifas.ufl.edu/4H389>). Being professional in your collaboration, prepared in your assessment, and intentional about your needs will increase the likelihood of a successful partnership.

Joyce Epstein, author of School, Family, and Community Partnership: Your Handbook for Action, defines “the development of an excellent partnership program [as] a process, not a single event.” She explains that “not all activities that are implemented will succeed the first time...” These features emphasize that partnerships should be thought out in advance, will need to be nurtured, and require patience for success.

STEP 1: Assess Your County Program: What Can You Provide?

- In order to effectively work with partners, the first step is to assess your county program and determine what you can provide in terms of assistance. This is called a Needs Assessment. For more information on a Needs Assessment, refer to Dr. Amy Harder’s publication Determining Program Priorities (<http://edis.ifas.ufl.edu/WC105>).

- You will want to identify your organization’s Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, and Threats (SWOT). For more information on how to conduct a SWOT analysis refer to Betsy Orr, Conducting a SWOT Analysis for Program Improvement (<https://files.eric.ed.gov/fulltext/ED543801.pdf>). While SWOT is often used for business models, if you treat your partnership as a business, these steps will help you evaluate your organization with honesty and begin your partnership with integrity.
- Once you’ve assessed and analyzed your own organization, determine your parameters in regard to what you can offer.
 - Time commitment: how much time can you commit to training, maintaining, and sustaining a program with this partnership? While minimal time commitments may seem ideal, they will offer less sustainability and less impact. It is important to consider the tradeoff of time investment vs. program impact.
 - Terms of partnership: will your partnership be a short-term or long-term partnership? A single event vs. a continual commitment will determine the amount of input required for success.
 - Focus of your partnership: Joyce Epstein outlines focuses thus: student-centered (direct services to students), family-centered (entire family as focus), school-centered (benefit the entire school), and community-centered (focus on community and citizens) activities.
 - Benefit to your organization: why do you need partners, and what do you need from them to be successful in your program implementation? These can be financial, human capacity, access to youth, space, location, transportation, etc.

Written by Vanessa Spero, regional specialized Extension agent II, Florida 4-H Youth Development Program, UF/IFAS Extension Southeast Extension District, Cocoa, FL 32926.

An Equal Opportunity Institution. 4-H is the nation’s largest youth development organization. Over 230,000 members in the State of Florida help to make up the community of more than 6.5 million young people across America. 4-H is a non-formal, practical educational program for youth. Florida 4-H is the youth development program of Florida Cooperative Extension, a part of the University of Florida/IFAS.

Once you've gotten the answers you need about your organization, come to the table with questions to ask your potential partner.

STEP 2: Partner Development

Now that you know what your organization can bring to the table and what it needs, it is time to prepare to meet with your potential partner. Below are a series of questions to consider asking during your initial meeting. It is imperative that all the important staff, employees, administrators, etc. are a part of this conversation, so make sure to ask yourself who else may need to be invited. For more ideas on partnership questions, refer to the University of New Hampshire's Afterschool Partnership Questionnaire (<https://studylib.net/doc/15920128/afterschool-partnership-questionnaire>).

Resources

- How is your program funded (federal, state, grants, fees)? If your program is grant-funded, how often is the grant cycle and are you able to be a part of the grant?
- How are your materials paid for?
- What curriculum do you currently use?
- What programs do you offer?
- What programs would you like to offer?

Staff Training

- What kind of training do you provide for your employees?
- What trainings are mandatory and which ones are voluntary or supplemental to your site? Examples of trainings include those that are required by the school district, grant, Department of Education, or Department of Child and Family Services.
- What topics do mandatory trainings cover? What are the topics covered by voluntary or supplemental trainings? These may include risk management, child safety, youth development, or subject specific trainings.
- When do these trainings take place (number of days, hours, etc.)?

- Are incentives or recognition given to staff for completing voluntary or supplemental trainings?
- Are you able to assist in any of these trainings?
- Would staff be amenable to supplemental trainings and could you assess what skills they may be looking for?
- What is the best way to have access to and train staff?

Family/Parental Engagement

- What are the volunteer requirements for your site? This includes screening requirements and any additional volunteer hours required by the site.
- Are family/parental engagement workshops a component of your program? Are these required?
- How often are the family/parental engagement opportunities? What is the participation like?
- Do you run these sessions or do partners manage them?
- How do you connect with family/parents on a regular basis (newsletters, social media, telephone calls, text messages, etc.)?
- Are family/parents given some type of handbook with rules and regulations for participating in your program?

Evaluation

- Are your youth members evaluated?
- If they are, how so and how is that data used?
- Can you have access to that data and/or would you be allowed to evaluate the youth you work with in a program?

Partners

- Who do you currently partner with?
- What services do they provide?

Barriers

- What are some of the barriers in resources, evaluations, etc. to your current program?
- What have been some of the barriers to a successful partnership with your organization in the past?

Other

- What is the hierarchy of your organization? Who do we need permission from in order to proceed and who are the best contacts to meet with as this partnership develops?
- What is the best way to communicate with you?
- What are your expectations in a partner?
- What is required of our staff to work with your youth (training, screening, etc.)?
- How is your program marketed?
- What is your hope in partnering with us?

While assessing your potential partner, you may come up with additional ideas and thoughts during your meeting and be able to share these fluidly. If you need time to process the answers to these questions make sure to set up a follow-up meeting, preferably either before you leave or the same week as your initial meeting.

Step 3: Tips for Success

Once you find the right partner, building the proper foundation is important. Here are some tips as referenced from Together... We Can! Achieving Successful Partnerships (<https://articles.extension.org/pages/73819/together-we-can-achieving-successful-partnerships>).

- Be patient. Sometimes an organization is eager to work with you, but there may be unforeseen circumstances that delay the start of a program, or it may have protocol you don't know about that must be followed.
- Share the credit. Organizations that work together need to share in the successes. Otherwise it won't be a mutually beneficial partnership.
- Determine if a Memorandum of Understanding/Agreement (MOU/MOA) is necessary for the partnership. Organizations differ in their requirements. Check who in your organization can approve an MOU/MOA—typically a dean, director, or similar.
- Make sure expectations are clear if you are planning to apply for a grant through this partnership. Have expectations and agreements in writing to decrease disappointments and increase the probability the partnership will remain intact.

- Reflect annually on your partnership by scheduling a meeting at the end of the program year or before the start of the new program year. This reflection will help address any issues before they destroy the partnership, or allow you to expand on the partnership.
- Don't be afraid to say "no" if you can't deliver what your partner requests. Sometimes it is better to hold off on an expansion in your partnership until both organizations have a healthier balance of resources.

In closing, the idea behind partnerships is building community support and sustainability. Keeping these goals in mind will help keep the partnership on track and help you determine how your partnership can continue to be successful in order to help you achieve your objectives.
