Involving Youth in the Community Development Process

Rosemary Barnett and Mark Brennan

As communities face challenges and opportunities to help serve their residents, they’re often faced with a lack of resources, including volunteers. However, many parents are discovering that their children may not only want to volunteer, but many teenagers are required to volunteer if they’re pursuing a future in college.

Youth represent a vast and often untapped resource for immediate and long-term community development efforts. They have energy, enthusiasm, time, and both creative and intellectual talent. As youth are brought into and connected with organizations and civic roles that they have traditionally been excluded from, they can participate in active and equal decision-making at multiple levels. Tapping youth resources benefits the community, too—community development is enhanced when local people, both young and old, work together to address local needs.

There are many ways to assist youth in becoming leaders and active participants within their community. For example, connecting with adults as mentors and guides will enable them to build the leadership skills that will help them as they become adults. In order to engage youth, adults must understand and respect youth culture, get youth involved at all levels of the organization, and respect their valuable contributions. As youth become more involved in positive relationships with adults, other youth, and community organizations, they’ll learn that they are valued citizens in their communities. They’ll develop their skills and confidence, all important steps in preparing for adulthood.

1. This document is FAR1214, one of a series of the Family Youth and Community Sciences Department, Florida Cooperative Extension Service, Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences, University of Florida. Broadcast as program 505. Published January 2007. Reviewed March 2012. In the interest of time and/or clarity, the broadcast version of this script may have been modified. Visit the EDIS website at http://edis.ifas.ufl.edu.

2. Rosemary Barnett, assistant professor, and Mark Brennan, assistant professor, Department of Family, Youth and Community Sciences, Cooperative Extension Service, Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences, University of Florida, Gainesville, FL 32611.
Listening, learning, and living together: it's the science of life. “Family Album” is a co-production of University of Florida IFAS Extension, the Department of Family, Youth and Community Sciences, and of WUFT-FM. If you'd like to learn more, please visit our website at http://www.familyalbumradio.org.

To listen to the radio broadcast:

http://www.radiosource.net/radio_stories/505.mp3

http://www.radiosource.net/radio_stories/505.wav

References

