THE SMILE SHE CARIES

Shannon Lyons, Class of 2020

Dark, cracked, and hollow Surrounded by a halo

White,

Like the rest of them

Appeared on the light.

Radiating from a silver pen with a logo

Everything else in place, "pink and moist"

We say. Automated. Passively,

"The pain is sharp"

She says

"She misses ice cream"

She says

All in quotes

Don't misquote.

Brush and floss

I advise

Prior proper prevention. My dad used to say

Preventative care

Not a choice for all, where

A free monogrammed toothbrush

Isn't so free.

Nothing left but a black hole.

It'll be gone soon enough, the traveling

Ladies who pull

"What's your favorite ice cream?" I ask

PLAYING OUTSIDE

Michelle McCullers, Class of 2020

It used to be green

I swear

I swear... desperately, as I feel its heat rising.

She looks up, with a drip of sweat

Lining her bangs.

"Like in the pictures?"

No, better than the pictures.

I'm so sorry that you can't see it.

"It's okay"

It's not okay.

Growing up in concrete, skinning

Your knees instead of falling

Into grass.

Not fair.

Michelle McCullers is a second year medical student. She graduated cum laude from FSU in December 2015 with an honors thesis in molecular biology. She is heading to the Daytona Beach campus in May.
