

---

COASTAL PHOTOGRAPH BY PETER WILSON

---

PHOTO 159. Coastal peat exposure at Magilligan Foreland, Northern Ireland. The peat rests on marine sand and is buried by aeolian sand. Undercutting by waves causes the peat to slump; the fallen blocks act a temporary armour until they disintegrate and are dispersed along the beach. (Photo: Peter Wilson, Department of Environmental Studies, University of Ulster at Coleraine, Northern Ireland).